

John Cridland CBE
Chair, Transport for the North

John Cridland joined Transport for the North in November 2015 as the organisation's independent chair. He plays a leading role in transforming Northern connectivity, working with business leaders and Northern transport authorities, along with Highways England, Network Rail, HS2 and the Department for Transport.

Formerly director general of the Confederation of British Industries, a post which he held for five years, John has been a voice for the business community for more than a decade, representing the interests of British business to Government, on public platforms and in the media.

John was awarded a CBE for services to business in 2006.
